Community Affairs Coordinator

Office of U.S. Senator Jack Reed

Office: (b) (6)

Senator Reed and Secretary Raimondo will lead a roundtable discussion with caregivers, workforce development leaders, and CEOs calling for sweeping investments in the care economy to address this crisis, including:

Making care affordable. Child-care spending grew 2,000% over the past 40 years as more women entered the workforce, while child-care costs have grown twice as fast as inflation since the 1990s. As a result, many skilled mothers are driven out of the workforce.

Taking financial care of our care workforce. Millions of women, primarily women of color, work all day, every day, in the care economy. In taxing jobs, they're typically making poverty wages. For far too long, these women have been unseen, underpaid, and undervalued. Major investments can bring dignity back to these jobs by providing better wages, benefits, opportunities, and support.

Addressing the lack of quality care facilities. Even before Covid-19, 43 percent of parents reported struggling to find an adequate child-care facility. This has only gotten worse as massive underenrollment triggered by the pandemic forced 1 in 10 child-care centers to close permanently.

The roundtable will highlight how President Biden's Build Back Better agenda addresses these issues by making historic investments in the care economy.
